CANADA UNLIMITED — The Formative Years

"Navigation Flight"—After a painting by Donald Anderson, Official War Artist, R.C.A.F. War Records

Wings for the Youth of Empire

FROM THE FAR CORNERS of the Empire they came—bronzed striplings from the Antipodes, pink-cheeked youths from England, lads from India and from the Indies—to train for the greatest battle of all time under the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

Over Canadian prairies, forests and towns they won their wings, and with them flew the youth of Canada, closely integrated in a new unity of purpose and a new understanding. Their courage, and the skill they learned in Canadian skies, held the enemy at bay during the dark years of the war and provided a flashing spearhead for the final victory . . . We shall be forever indebted to them.

The training of 225,000 men for air force duty was a major Canadian contribution towards the winning of the war, but equally important, it was a portent of future greatness, for out of such unified and far-reaching efforts will come the Canada of tomorrow—Canada Unlimited.

To each of us whose savings went into Victory Bonds to contribute to this great achievement, there remains the continuing challenge to hold those Bonds as our investments in a glowing future.

Every FATHER

...should answer these 4 questions:

1 How much are your savings really WORTH? The cash value of your savings is not what counts most. What is important is the amount of continuous income they would provide if your wife and children were left without other means of support . . .

2 Exactly what is the MONTHLY cost of keeping your family? Only by calculating your family's needs in black and white can you plan an adequate "continued income" . . . the amount they would really need to live on, the amount on which your insurance program should be based . . .

3 What KIND of insurance policy should you choose? You may want a policy which, in addition to protecting your family, will provide for your own retirement. Or you can get a policy which will pay the children's college fees, even if you do not live to pay all the premiums. It may be that a Mutual Life 'FAMILY INCOME' policy is needed to complete your insurance program. Let an experienced Mutual Life representative help you choose just the right plan for your needs . . .

4 Is there any DIFFERENCE between life insurance companies? There is! Life insurance companies are much alike as to policies and rates, but actual long-term results vary widely. We invite you to compare The Mutual Life of Canada's record with that of any other company.

Evidence of the satisfaction of Mutual Life policyholders is furnished by the fact that whole families and succeeding generations have entrusted their life insurance programs exclusively to The Mutual Life, and each year approximately 35% of its new business comes from policyholders. Ask your Mutual Life of Canada representative to explain the special features of this Company.

Commentaries

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

"Dedication To The Future"

"For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth:
For, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing,
And her people a joy.
There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man,
That hath not filled his days;
And they shall build houses, and inhabit them;
They shall not labour in vain,
The wolf and the lamb shall feed together,
They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain."
—Isaiah, Chapter 65

The great prophets of Israel were not only political exponents and ethical teachers but also spiritual psychiatrists. Only in recent years have we come to appreciate the element of spiritual healing offered by the prophets. Thus it is that the prophets summon men not to be bound so much to the past but rather to have faith in the future. For this reason the most oft-repeated phrase in prophetic writing is the utterance "and it shall come to pass".

The festival of Rosh Hashonah, of all Jewish holy days, proclaims the message of prophetic futurism. No wonder the rabbis have characterized it as "Ha-yom Haras Olam" the day which marks the world's birthday.

Rosh Hashonah 5707 is fraught with great significance regarding the future and hence it ought not to be difficult to accept. Despite the post-war confusion a new age has suddenly come upon us and we believe that a new world is in the making. Though the world of tomorrow may appear mysterious, in the spirit of prophetic tradition we are to face the future unafraid. Hence, on this New Year we re-read and take as our motto the inspiring words of Isaiah: "For, behold, I create a new heaven and a new earth.... The voice of weeping shall no more be heard; there shall no longer be an infant who dieth nor an old man that hath not filled out his days."

In the new world the prophet visions a society of growing health; a society that has conquered disease and overcome pain and where death does not snatch the life of the young. How modern is this ancient prophet's hope! Our age constitutes a veritable new earth when we reflect upon the great progress we have made in the art of healing. The terrible war itself has speeded untold discoveries in medicines and new techniques in the treatment of physical and mental ills.

The polio epidemic sweeping the country at present has made us all fearful, the young and the mature. But we can be hopeful that this dreadful disease is now under attack by the strategists of science and the consecrated self-sacrificing microbe hunters. Soon we pray and hope poliomyelitis will be another disease conquered through the magic of science and man's suffering lessened.

Hence, as believers in the future and the hope it holds for mankind's emancipation from pain, we can truly hopefully usher in the New Year 5707.

In the same glorious chapter (Isaiah 56) the prophet along with describing the new world of growing health and longevity envisions a society of economic contentment: "They shall build houses and inhabit them, they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them, they shall not labor in vain nor bring forth terror." Hence, we have the prophetic dream of social justice in industry, a world free from exploitation.

Who can deny that World War II has brought the greatest economic dislocation? This is but natural in years of reconversion from a war economy into a peacetime economy. The valiant men who fought and bled for victory, of course, do not find our world as yet a place for heroes to dwell in. Our returned fighting men, thousands of them, have no homes to live in. It is true also that toilers of mine and factory who made the weapons of victory possible must now go through the same old pattern of strikes and lockouts. Industrial suspicion and unrest are but natural fruitages of such times as ours.

But for one sure hopeful sign our time has not been the witness of a revolution such as the Russian which followed World War I! Throughout the world leaders of government are searching to curb selfishness and to advance the lot of the common man. Improved standards of living are goals for which the peoples of the earth are striving. The conviction of thoughtful men and women everywhere is that the future is fraught with promise regarding social justice for the multitudes hitherto denied and dispossessed.

The third element in Isaiah's noble vision of the new world is that: "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my Holy mountain, saith the Lord."

Can we believe this vision is about to be fleshed? Is universal peace really near at hand? As we view the international scene at the present we experience our hope to be darkened by talk of a third world war. How sad it is that when representatives of twenty-one nations gathered in Paris, struggling to write treaties of peace, we so glibly speak of World War III!

What about the promises we made to ourselves during the dreadful days of war: Ah, if only we triumph over the Axis and we are free from Axis tyranny—we then shall rebuild society on moral foundations. Ours will be the goal to strive for a united mankind and a fraternity of nations. This was evident in the trying hours when France was about to fall. It was then that Churchill offered to merge the sovereignties of France and Britain into one co-ordinated state.

But look now and find the nations great or small who offer to subordinate their national sovereignty! And this in an hour when the atom bomb has practically obliterated boundaries, and has made borders between countries meaningless.

Surely, brotherhood among nations is today a desperate necessity, and, what is more, the vision of Isaiah due to the developments in the art of communication takes on practical reality. We have today the instruments by which to enforce world peace.

We are hopeful regarding the United Nations Organization. It has become a great forum in which to debate the world issues. This international institution and allied international organizations constitute great advances toward world government which ultimately must be established. Let us not have an attitude of defeat because of the present battle of words heard at the Paris

every friday

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor:
'Yes, for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor.'"

Rosh Hashonah, the New Year holy day, is the festival which has meaning to people of all kinds, colors, beliefs and countries. It is the one which has to do with human brotherhood, the one which calls all the inhabitants of the universe together into one world to do the divine will, to stress the fact that only by cooperation can the highest good be achieved for all mankind, with emphasis on the all. Rosh Hashonah is a reminder that people are people and have obligations to each other because of that before any other reason. This holy day is the one which has to do with the intrinsic human personality as such, and teaches that spiritual equality extends to every human being simply because he is a member of the same company, the band of mankind that encircles the earth and has the same basic feelings and instincts to set it apart from the lower animals by potential power to progress.

All over the world Jews are taking note of the New Year, the holy day which looks with steadfast assurance toward a better world and a nobler humanity no matter how dark the time. Due to the most sinister departure from civilization in the history of the world, hundreds of thousands mourn the loss of loved ones who were killed because they were Jews, most of them without leaving a trace. Some of these survivors live in established communities on one continent or another but hundreds of thousands exist in abject conditions as part of a determined migration or in displaced persons camps which, even if good, are not a fitting habitation for free people, in Germany or Cyprus or some other hole. Homeless, suspended, they wait in an uncertainty which is worse and more corroding than the barbed wire enclosures. Liberated, they are not free. They wait and they sink down and deteriorate because they lack the essential rights, the right to work, the right to privacy, the right to home.

Let the world take a look at these people. They have been drastically reduced in numbers and those who remain have been reduced in dignity. Does their desperate existence enhance the stature of the world at large or does it draw that stature down to minuscule size? On this Rosh Hashonah, the Jewish holy day which celebrates the birthday of the universe by reaffirming the fact that every person is an equal member of the human family, let the nations pause to think about what happened to the Jews. There is a terrible lesson in it for this time of the year and what it stands for.

First of all, the condition of the Jews today bears witness to the breakdown of the moral laws which they originated and to which the nations pay lip service. It means that by failing to prevent the catastrophe when it was still preventable the nations showed an inner decay and a depreciation of their attitude toward the sanctity of the individual which is continuing to bear its evil, distorted fruit in the cheapness in which all human life is held in spite of the gruesome blood-letting of these years. For justice, mercy for all suffering people everywhere, the Jewish teaching, is in continuous decline and man's savagery to man is being taken for granted as war's normal aftermath, whereas it was war's forerunner.

The victory of Hitler over the Jews which is so omnipresent can be laid at least in part to the indecent indifference and to the loss of conscience and responsibility of the foremost nations. It should be proved there is spoken word and willingness in an effort to pry open some saving doors to a new life for those who can still be saved. The nations need to redeem themselves by a reawakening of the protected human being as something without which there can be no world above crude barbarity. For their own salvation they need to make themselves clean. By remaining cold and aloof toward the Jewish problem they strike in essence a note of insensitiveness toward all humanity. What they do to relieve that problem will be a sign of the recuperation of the softer virtues without which the whole world is doomed to be gripped by a mania for destruction. The nations must return to sanity through visible evidence of a desire to settle all those who wander without fixed and permanent abode and the essentials of normal living.

The Jews will continue to hope that persecution and pogroms and anti-Semitic policy and program will cease. They know their own indestructibility and their unbroken will to live in the face of prejudice, active hostility, repressive legislation, and impoverishment. With them hope is an old cardinal dogma, always new. It means hope for all people, interdependent in one world.

"On Anxiety Street there are plenty of neighbours."

"It's mighty decent of you, Harry, to take young Bill to school while I'm on my back," said Don.

"Yes, it's a real neighbourly act," his wife added.

"Think nothing of it," said Harry. "They say, you know, that on Anxiety Street there are plenty of neighbours. Certainly I've learned a lot about being neighbourly from the business I'm in."

Harry's business . . . the life insurance business . . . is founded on that very thing. It comes to the aid of anxious people in time of trouble or bereavement. Four million people have found that the surest way to peace of mind for themselves and their loved ones is to pool their savings and share in the benefits of a fund which pays out more than half a million dollars every working day to policyholders and beneficiaries.

Life insurance was designed to provide protection for the people through the people's thrift. During the war years its payments to policyholders and beneficiaries in Canada amounted to over One Billion Dollars. Thirty Million Dollars of these payments went to beneficiaries of those who had died on Active Service overseas.

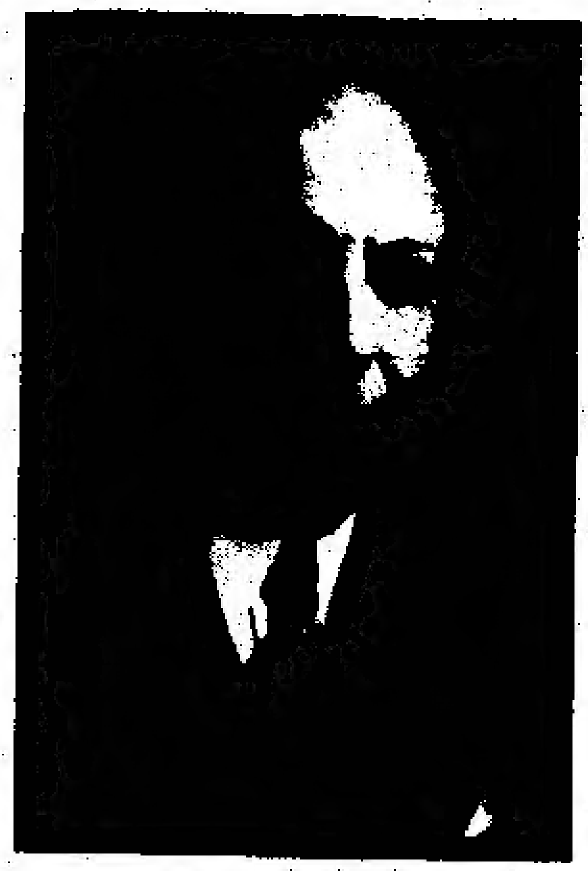
Canadian Jewry Recognizes Its Solemn Duty To Aid Those Overseas

By Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, President of The Canadian Jewish Congress

Samuel Bronfman, the president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, has issued the following message on the occasion of the Jewish New Year which will open on September 26.



Samuel Bronfman, Montreal, President, Canadian Jewish Congress
—Copyright by Karsh

As the year 5706 passes into history, nothing emerges from its record more clearly than the fact that the absence of war, which distinguished it above its six predecessors unfortunately has not meant the automatic establishment of peace. The armies of Nazism may have been defeated but it is equally true that the hope for a post-war era of social and international justice, a hope which sustained the spirits of men during the darkest days of the ordeal, is still far from realization. That warm friendship which one naturally expected to ensue after a glorious comradeship-in-arms, has, singularly enough, not yet come to pass. Entire populations still remain uprooted from their soil; many peoples still do not know what their political morrow may bring; and, in the place of the single gigantic problem which faced the world for more than half a decade, the world faces a host of problems which, though smaller in size and perhaps lesser in intensity, still cry out from the hearts of men for solution.

Not the least of these is the fate of European Jewry. After a war in which our people stood out as the first and the most ruthlessly attacked of its victims, the remnant of Israel which miraculously escaped the German thoroughness in murder, still is to be found, not in any haven of home, but languishing in concentration camps or wandering upon the highways and by-ways of Europe. Behind them are the mass graves of their kith and kin, the nightmare memories of their own suffering, and, in recent days, new pogroms directed against the tormented survivors of Hitlerism; before them, ports without exit, and sanctuaries without entry. The statement that insofar as European Jewry is concerned, Hitler won his war, is not entirely without its foundation in fact. The "displaced person", the cold epithet by which the human wreckage of war is designated in contemporary documents, is today, seventeen months after V-Day, more displaced and misplaced than ever. One gets the impression, indeed, that a fate even worse than that of "a forgotten people" has overtaken European Conference and at the United Nations Assembly meetings. These debates are splendid safety valves and help the cause of parliamentary world order.

The Western bloc of nations must learn to live in peace with the Eastern bloc. Russia with her system of collective capitalism need not be a threat to our system of individual capitalism.

Our faith in world peace must now be resolute! All of us must engage in the battle to win the peace. The task ahead is not of days but of decades. It will take patience to dispel the suspicions of the Soviet Union regarding the democracies, but it is important not to magnify the differences, ideological and otherwise, which exist between the Soviets and citizens of Western democracies. A time there was when it was thought impossible for Christian and Moslem countries to live in the same world in peace. But that was a grave error. And so it is a mistake to hold to the view that we can not live in peace with the Russians. The three great victorious nations, the U.S.A., the Soviet Union and Great Britain, these hold the key today to world peace!

On Rosh Hashonah 5707 we of Israel's household remind ourselves that prophetic literature has characterized us as Asire Hatikva, prisoners of hope. We have ever been held captive by our ideals of the better days to come. We dare not despair. In the darkest of days we have never as a people lost the zest for life.

We, of course, are horror-stricken by the callousness of the world in its treatment of the Jewish survivors in Europe. We had expected that after the slaughter by the Nazis of six million of our brethren the conscience of the world would be aroused in behalf of Israel that has given so much to civilization! But, instead, Jewish pitiful survivors sailing in floating coffins to the shores of the overpromised Jewish homeland are swooped down upon by ships of His Majesty's Navy and driven from the land of their fathers, and what is more imprisoned again behind barbed wires!

We cry aloud in protest against this inhumanity. The prophets' vision of Jerusalem as a place of rejoicing for Israel must be realized and made possible lest the world may never know the meaning of peace. It is our conviction that Jewish national homelessness must come to an end. Jewish achievement in the restoration of the waste places of Palestine to habitations of plenty and civilization in reality have brought about the reconstitution of Eretz Israel. It is now for the nations of the world to honor the pledge made to Israel and guarantee legally that Palestine become the Jewish state.

We remind the government of Great Britain and all other powerful nations that Israel, the little people, by virtue of the spirit is mightier still. This explains why we have been the witnesses of the downfall of the mighty Syrian and Roman empires. They are no more and Israel lives! As captives of hope, we, on this Rosh Hashonah at a time of post-war confusion, long and pray for the world of the prophet Isaiah. We hold to the future of a new world in the making where health will reign supreme; a world of economic abundance and a world of genuine brotherhood.

Let no disappointment rob us of this hope. Let us now dedicate ourselves to the unborn future. God grant that this year 5707 be a happy year for Israel and all the children of men.

The Lack Of Trained Workers And Its Effect On The Jewish Community

By Saul Hayes, Of Montreal, National Executive Director Of The Canadian Jewish Congress And United Jewish Relief Agencies Of Canada

Wherever we turn these days on the Jewish community scene we come across a shortage which is little short of crippling. When we go overseas we are told by those responsible that even some of the most tragic aspects of the condition of our people could be alleviated if we had adequate workers. Certainly when we come across an unusually well-equipped man at work there his sphere of life is like an oasis of cheer in the wilderness of the dark continent of modern times.

Furthermore, if it is in anyone's mind that the critical overseas situation which calls so urgently upon our best people is a temporary one to be resolved by some diplomatic act such as the opening of the doors of Palestine or the drafting of satisfactory treaty clauses, they are far off the mark. However widespread such an impression might be, one can only hope that the responsible leaders of our community life on whose shoulders lies the onus of preparing for the duties ahead of us do not share it.

"In times like these" has for decades been the hobbling cliche which has prevented necessary fundamental work from being done on the ground that every day is an emergency taxing the capacities of the hour and that the underlying, current programs cannot be dealt with because of the emergency. Our age is old enough to know that we shall always have our emergencies with us and that we could alleviate and even lessen them by adjusting our thinking to the truth that the emergencies are our normal condition for some time to come and we must learn to cope with them and even to expect them.

To return to the European scene. Wherever the remnants of overseas stricken Jewry find a home there will be a huge problem of social and medical rehabilitation which will certainly be beyond the capacities of the Jewish communities indigenous to the countries of settlement, even of Palestine. Furthermore, we must remember an important aspect of the current Exodus from Europe. The Jewish position may be that our people are impelled by a variety of considerations to leave the continent and we are championing the basic human right of emigration. But it must ~~to emigration~~ and not expulsion.

It must be most clearly asserted that if a Jew leaves Europe, or if all Jews leave Europe, he or they do not surrender their right to stay in Europe if they had so chosen. In other words, this must be no retreat but an advance with the lines of route properly ensured. Specifically there is a battle that all Jewry must fight in Europe, regardless of developments in Zionism, for the legal and civic position of the Jews who remain in Europe, for their community rights and their freedom of worship, for the return of lost Jewish possessions and for the extermination of the seeds and fruits of Nazism. Jews can never be safe in America, in Palestine or anywhere in this one world if an entire continent is purulent and suppurating with the infectious bacteria of anti-Semitism. There are therefore permanent constitutional and legal problems of the Jewish community which will require the best talents of devoted, trained workers.

Nor should we believe for a moment that this is simply a matter of funds, of engaging the respective experts in law, history, etc., to deal with these problems as cases in their professions. These are strictly Jewish problems and require for their solution the optimum Jewish background, the most thorough absorption of Jewish historic experience and a fine sensitivity to the forms which the Jewish problem assumes in day-by-day social, legal and religious life.

But the overseas situation already is taking second place in our manpower picture, perhaps prematurely. The need for properly equipped workers on this continent as our communities awaken to the urgency of our own needs is becoming a brake upon our development. Perhaps our schools are the first to feel it, or to make their dearth best known. Perhaps this is because it is more difficult to substitute for a Jewish education in a Jewish educator than in any other of our social services (even the rabbis have been able to cut down on their familiarity with the tractates of the Talmud, but the lessening gap in learning between our teachers and their classes cannot long continue).

One of the results of this situation has been to raise the salary standards of the limited number of experienced teachers but another result has been to shoulder them with responsibilities of position which many of them are unable to fulfill. The schools have shown a

Ordinarily, Edward Reiner and his mother left the small brownstone house on West Ninetieth Street, near Riverside Drive, late in the afternoon. He would hold the vestibule door open with his left elbow and take his mother's arm so that she wouldn't trip over the door mat, and then he would help her down the eight steps to the sidewalk. He was a medium-sized man with gray, thinning hair and thoughtful features. In front of the house old Mrs. Reiner would turn around and look up to make sure that the windows of her two-room apartment on the second floor were open and the Venetian blinds lowered. She liked the house because it had Venetian blinds, no elevator, and only three floors. Back home in Prague she had lived for more than forty years in an old three-story house near the Waldstein Palace. It had a baroque facade, a sixteenth-century iron gate, and Venetian blinds. She had entered the house as a bride and, following the death of her husband three years later, had lived there with her son. Shortly after the Reiners had arrived in New York as refugees in 1940, the old lady had had a slight heart attack and her son had suggested moving to a ground-floor apartment, but the old lady had refused to move. "I have walked stairs for forty years in our house," she had said. "Just let me go back home to Prague and I'll be as young and healthy as ever."

She was a small, frail, white-haired woman, and the doctor had cautioned against any physical or emotional strain. The doctor was also a refugee from Prague and had known her for many years there. "There's nothing wrong with you, milostiva pani," he had said, "but you are over seventy. You mustn't overdo things." He had glanced at Reiner and said, "I'm sure that the Herr Direktor will take good care of you."

Down on the street, Reiner would take his mother's arm and cautiously guide her, watching out for the traffic at intersections. New York's heavy traffic was one reason he would never let his mother go anywhere alone. Fortunately, she had no desire to see the city. Most of the time, she was content to sit in an armchair by the front window, gazing out at the street and commenting on what she saw. In summer she watched, disapprovingly, the children playing ball on the pavement and between the parked cars. "In Prague, people wouldn't let their children play in the middle of the street," she said time and again. "I never let you run around in front of the house, Edi. Look how they fight and shout. All unwashed. The parents in this town have no time for their children." She always called New York "this town", as though she didn't like to say its name.

If the weather was fine, the Reiners would walk over to Broadway and ride a streetcar down to Seventy-second Street. They liked the streetcars because they reminded them of the trolleys in Prague, though in New York the motormen stopped and started so fast that they were always thrown back and forth. On Seventy-second Street, Reiner and his mother would get out and walk to one of the small cafés where they were always sure to meet some of their people. The waiter would greet them profusely — "Kompliment, Herr Direktor" — bowing deep from the waist and smiling the smile that he reserved for important clients. He would hold the chair for Madame and help the Herr Direktor out of his coat and, without waiting for their order, would hurry over to the counter and bring two cups of coffee, one with an extra portion of Schlag for Madame, and a black one for the Herr Direktor. Everybody called Reiner Herr Direktor, or pane rediteli, as they had done back home in Prague. There was the smell of freshly baked pastry and of good, strong coffee — not made in one of those strange, balloon-like bottles but in an old-fashioned drip pot — and the muted, pleasantly familiar sound of Czech and German voices. Occasionally, a few Americans would come in for a piece of pastry — they called it "cake", unable to distinguish between Sachertorte, Guglhupf, and Nussroulade — but they were as incongruous a sight as though they had suddenly appeared at the Café Continental in Prague, where everybody would turn to look at people who spoke English. Old Mrs. Reiner didn't understand English.

the Prague Eskompte Bank. He had been also one of the town's more eligible bachelors, but instead of getting married, he had devoted himself to his widowed mother. Elderly women had sighed wistfully at the sight of Direktor Reiner appearing with his mother at concerts or at the theatre, and thought of their own children, who came to visit them reluctantly only once in a fortnight.

Reiner's opinions on economics had been widely listened to in financial circles. In 1938, the Prager Tageblatt and the Lidové Noviny had published his statement, made at a stockholders' meeting, that the Germans would not bother actually to invade Czechoslovakia, since "they could make fullest use of our economic resources by way of peaceful mutual trade agreements." Reiner had always been of the opinion that the world would be a better place if it were managed by internationally-minded businessmen, bankers, and industrialists, who knew "how to get along." When one of his secretaries, a Sudeten German named Hoehnel, had suggested early in March, 1939, that there might be trouble and that the Herr Direktor had better leave the country, Reiner had politely thanked him for the suggestion and added that he preferred to make his own decisions. A few days later, Hoehnel had sat at the large desk in Reiner's oak-panelled private office and told him to get the hell out of the bank. After a few unpleasant months, Reiner had managed to obtain an exit permit for his mother and himself, but he had had to leave almost everything behind. He hadn't minded so much leaving his farm and the old house, but he regretted having to give up his paintings—a fine collection of French Impressionists—and his first editions, which included the complete works of Franz Kafka. Fortunately, he had some American securities, which he had bought as early as 1933, and he figured that the income from them would be just enough for him and his mother to live on very modestly in America. He had asked Dr. Hudec, the bank's counsel, to take care of his things. Dr. Hudec was obligated to Reiner—indeed, owed his position to the Herr Direktor and had promised to do all he could. "We'll be back as soon as this is over," Reiner had said to him. "My place is here."

One evening in June, 1945, the Reiners were having dinner at a Viennese place near Seventy-second Street when they were joined by Dr. Hermann, a friend and fellow-refugee who had been a noted corporation lawyer in Prague. After greetings had been exchanged, Reiner pointed to the beef on his plate and made a face. "They call this boiled beef, but it's a far cry from the boiled beef at Piskacek's."

Dr. Hermann sighed deeply. "Piskacek," he said, pronouncing the name of the famous Prague restaurant in a melodious, wistful way. "Sounds like another world."

"Tomorrow we'll eat at home," Reiner said. "I'll go over to the market and get a young chicken, cleaned and washed, ready to cook. You put it into boiling water and that's all. Mother likes the soup, and one chicken is enough for two dinners."

Dr. Hermann agreed that one couldn't eat well in restaurants these days and, besides, it was too expensive. "Why don't you buy that ready-made chicken in glass jars?" he said. "You have only to heat it and serve it."

"Mother doesn't like the food that comes in cans and jars," Reiner said. "She thinks it loses its nutrition value in those containers."

Old Mrs. Reiner nodded and said, "Why, look at the bread they have here. Packed in cellophane and cut in slices. Does it smell like bread? Does it taste like bread?"

"There is a baker on Second Avenue who has very good rye bread," Dr. Hermann said. "Almost as good as back home. When I get there the next time, I'll buy you a loaf, too."

"You are always so attentive, Dr. Hermann," the old lady said. She took another swallow of coffee. "When do you think we'll go back home, now that the war is over?"

"President Benes's last speech was hopeful," the lawyer said. He added, "Of course, the question remains whether it will ever be over for us who are here in America."

Old Mrs. Reiner gave him a startled glance and Reiner spoke sharply. "What's the matter, Dr. Hermann? You were always an optimist."

CASH
MONEY
-and some of it may come your way!

Yesterday Farmer Neilson got over $800 cash when he sold his grain. Through the processes of trade and commerce, some of that money may come to you. Banking service enabled him to obtain his money quickly.

The farmer doesn't have to wait for his money until his grain reaches the consumer . . . this is important to you, no matter where you live or what your work.

Farmer Neilson, and thousands like him, spend money for household and farm equipment, food, clothes, radios, paint and a hundred other things. This helps keep people busy all over the Dominion.

Your bank advances credit also to help farmers plant, cultivate and harvest crops of all kinds, to buy and raise livestock. Banking service is something like the good oil in the machinery, you never notice it. But it is a prime factor in your prosperity . . . in the Canadian way of life.

MOTHER OF FIVE FIGHTS SWIRLING CURRENT... IN SPECTACULAR RESCUE OF BOY!

Mrs. H. D. WILFORD wins Dow Award

THE DOW AWARD is a citation for outstanding heroism and includes, as a tangible expression of appreciation, a $100 Victory Bond. Winners are selected by The Dow Award Committee, a group of editors of leading Montreal daily newspapers.

Caught in the turbulent waters of the Otonabee River near Peterborough, a 7-year-old boy screamed frantically for help. He had been trying to swim to shore from a raft when the current over-powered him.

Mrs. H. D. Wilford of Lindsay, Ont., acted quickly when she heard the cries. Leaping into the fast-moving river, she struck out for the drowning boy. Desperately she fought against the current . . . edging closer and closer to the frantic youngster. When she reached him, he was in poor shape . . . and it was only after a considerable struggle that she succeeded in dragging him back to the beach.

This brave mother of five children deserves great praise. We are proud to pay tribute to Mrs. H. D. Wilford through the presentation of The Dow Award.

Weizmann, Scientist And Spokesman Of The Modern Zionist Movement

By Louis Lipsky, Former President, Zionist Organization Of America

For thirty eventful years, the intriguing personality of Dr. Chaim Weizmann stands out in a singular way as the incarnation of the struggle for Jewish national freedom. No other Jewish leader in the long history of the Dispersion ever struggled with such resilient persistence through the difficulties of so thorny a path. He was the leader of the Return. He had to become the Interpreter of the Jewish martyrdom of our day.

Weizmann's leadership was a long vigil of painful struggle, alternating hope and despair—few joys and many griefs—which only deep-rooted faith and great vision enabled him to sustain through the years without the buckling of his armor, the breaking of his spirit. The pattern of his Zionist life was never broken.

He was born in a home, on a street, in a community, where the vocabulary of Zionism was a part of everyday life. His rebi was his teacher, in Zionism, his father his guide. He knew from his earliest days that Israel's hope would be fulfilled when God and Israel would be attuned to the miracle of a new creation. But the dead bones would have to be quickened with new life. Organs and functions would have to be summoned out of the void and given their appointed place in the Renaissance. Redemption could not come while Israel lingered in abject servitude.

When the First World War broke, destiny found Weizmann prepared for the task of leading. It was to this moment he had looked forward when England became his home. He shared the views of Theodor Herzl that England was destined to become the guardian of Israel's hope—England, where Disraeli had ruled, where generations of Bible-loving people had faith in the prophecies. He was convinced that the time had come to build on the effort Herzl had initiated in an earlier day.

He was transformed by his absorption in creating a Zionist political front in London. He had been an interpreter of Zionism at the Congresses. He was the master of theories and polemics. Now, the professor became an advocate. He acquired the approach of the statesman, the suavity of the diplomat.

He converted that steadfast and loyal friend, General Jan Smuts, who influenced imperial policy in the first war and played the same gallant part in the second war. He enlisted the support of a great journalist, H. L. Brailsford, as an advocate of Zionism as an integral part of British policy. He carried through the lengthy negotiations that led to the issuing of the Balfour Declaration.

He submitted the Zionist demands at the Peace Conference. He visited Palestine as the chairman of the first official Zionist Commission. He established friendly relations with the Arab Prince Feisal and joined in the signing of a pact which was to usher in an era of lasting peace between the Arabs and Jews. He laid the cornerstone of the Hebrew University on Mt. Scopus. This meticulous worker in a chemical laboratory, this debater on the floor of a Zionist Congress, was immersed in problems of finance, of settlement, of organization, and had to plan the action which was to follow the appointment of the First High Commissioner.

Weizmann came to us in the United States first as a missionary of the Keren Hayesod. Over the years, he has spoken in many campaigns, at many dinners, in many intimate conferences. His message has reached the leading personalities in the American theater of political action. He never qualified as an American orator. His voice is not resonant—he has few gestures—he hates the impersonation of emotion.

But no Jewish speaker in our day ever made the same deep and lasting impression. His words seemed the issue of suffering. He made the impression of a murky flame which had to be fanned to give heat. He established an identification of himself with his message. He drew his thought out of the depths and was always conscious of his historic responsibility.

In my thoughts Weizmann is always associated with Shmarya Levin. Shmarya Levin spread the gospel of Weizmann's leadership with fiery eloquence everywhere in America. He was the incandescent torch of Zionist thought and feeling, eventually consumed in the fire of his passion. When he spoke, it was like a volcano in eruption. He seemed almost to be saying to Jews, "Remember the Rock from which you were hewn; lift yourself and reach for the Crown." He radiated faith and confidence in Jewish destiny that sometimes approached religious ecstasy.

He was older than Weizmann but he loved to speak of him as his master. He was like a father who parades the achievements of a son.

Weizmann has never been bound

THE TORONTO JEWISH COMMUNITY STRIVES FOR SOCIAL PROGRESS THROUGH UNITY

By Samuel Posluns, President of The United Jewish Welfare Fund

This article will be in the form of a review of activities during the past year, rather than a forecast of program in 1946-47. The United Jewish Welfare Fund has been fortunate in having Mr. Edward E. Gelber as its president during the trying period of the past year. The achievements of the Welfare Fund during that period are, in large measure, a result of his diligent service on behalf of Jews of this city. His fine record as leader of the Welfare Fund will be an inspiration to myself, and I am sure, to Welfare Fund leaders for many years to come.

The past twelve months have carried us from a world at war to a world at peace. V. J. Day, last August of 1945, brought us final victory. Our first immediate reaction of relief and joy was not of long duration; as reports came to us from liberated Europe we realized that there was still a war to be won for the remaining 1,500,000 Jews left in Europe. Communities in this country have responded immediately to the gigantic task of bringing aid, both material and spiritual, to Hitler's first and most devastated victims.

In Toronto, the United Jewish Welfare Fund unhesitatingly adopted its full share of the quota set for Ontario, for overseas relief. The urgency of overseas relief has always been and still is before the Welfare Fund, which is Toronto's major medium for meeting these needs. The close of the war has also had the effect of making us look homeward, to our own community.

Since its beginning in 1937, the Welfare Fund structure has grown and developed to the point where it is now a complex organization with many departments and committees involving the efforts of approximately 1,200 members of the Toronto Jewish community. The program of the Welfare Fund is two-fold. It is concerned with raising funds as an expression of the community's interest and desire to assist in the support of overseas, national and local programs.

Fund-raising has the necessary corollary of fund distribution which to be valid must be based on knowledge and planning. (The community has shown its confidence in the purposes and administration of the Welfare Fund; its increased financial support and the willingness of individual members to assume responsibilities have demonstrated this confidence.) In this report, therefore, a brief summary will be given to show the manner in which these two functional principles have been carried out.

The Service Council has the task of each year raising the objective which is adopted jointly by it and the Board of Directors of the Welfare Fund. Upon this volunteer body of some 1,200 men, women and young people, has rested the responsibility of raising increasing sums commensurate with needs, each year. Mr. Samuel J. Granatstein, who served as chairman of the Men's Service Council, and general Campaign Chairman this year, has given unstintingly of his time and efforts.

At this time, we can report that to date the 1946 campaign total is $605,000 from 9,300 subscribers. These pledges represent an increase of 54% over gifts from the same subscribers last year. So far we have 2,563 new pledges for $36,324. Our goal of $626,620 was the largest ever undertaken by this community. In our endeavour to reach it, we had the co-operation of men, women and young people from every group in the community.

Three major factors were outstanding in this year's campaign, the support given by the leaders of the community in their pledges of unexpected generosity ($2,500 to $15,000; $6,000 to $12,000, etc.) and also by all givers who recognized unprecedented needs by doubling, tripling and even to increasing gifts by 500% more than in the previous campaign. Support has come from all sections of the community.

The second outstanding factor was the number of younger and newer men who came forward to positions of leadership in the trades and professions. (There were 24 new trade and professional chairmen out of a total of 47.) The third asset was the excellence of the publicity, which sustained the campaign.

In the distribution of funds, the key group in the Welfare Fund is the Budget Committee which each year spends many evenings and Sunday mornings carefully studying the recommendations which come to it from the Divisions. Last year, under the able chairmanship of Mr. Joseph Levine, this Committee analyzed the budget recommendations of 46 agencies, and studied them carefully in relation to the needs they represented and related individual needs to each other and to the total.

The Budget Committee sends on its recommendations to the Executive Committee, which in turn submits them for ratification to a joint meeting of the Board of Directors of the Welfare Fund and Service Council. The budgeting process is therefore a sifting one spreading to a widening group who thus participate in the setting of a goal which is presented to the community for its support.

The Welfare Fund is an organized effort to consider total community needs. Planning for a better community is not a separate department, but the life-stream of Welfare Fund thinking and activity. For example, the Service Council which has the primary task of fund-raising also carried on a program of community education.

The main arteries of Community planning are the Divisions (Jewish Social Service Agencies, the Division on Jewish Education) and a newly-created body called the Committee on Capital Needs and Planning. Leading these three groups for the coming year will be Julius Wiener, Dr. Levic Jessel, and Samuel J. Granatstein.

In the achievement of these three bodies we can report the creation of the Jewish Camp Council, through the amalgamation of Camp Bnai Brith, the Jewish Girls' Camp of the Council of Jewish Women, and Camp Northland of the Y.M. and Y.W.H.A. The essence of the program of the Council is provision for a camp program for boys and girls which will serve the entire community. The Council is utilizing the two camp sites of Camp Bnai Brith and Northland. It has adopted a basic camp period of three weeks for all children, a communal approach which makes no distinction between those who can and those who cannot afford to pay the camp fee, and a co-ordinated administration including the recruiting and training of personnel.

In this camp project which has been acclaimed as a progressive communal undertaking by experts both in Canada and the United States; the public spiritedness of the three participating groups, the Bnai Brith, Council of Jewish Women, and Y.M. and Y.W.H.A., has been a source of inspiration to all those interested in this truly forward step.

The Division on Jewish Education has striven to raise the standards of its member agencies. A study of tuition fee payments has lead to the adoption of a minimum scale of fees for all schools, a step which has not only increased the income of the Schools, but has also standardized rates. During the past year also, a salary scale for the teaching staffs of the Schools has been adopted, with the co-operation of the Hebrew Teachers Alliance and the Educational Committee of the Canadian Jewish Congress. It is hoped that the adoption of this scale, which gives recognition to a body of community employers who have long been underpaid, will provide an inducement to qualified persons to enter the profession of Jewish teaching.

Under the aegis of the Committee on Capital Planning, two groups who wished to conduct necessary capital campaigns for building needs were brought together for a joint endeavour, the Jewish War Memorial Centre Campaign, which was held in the Fall of 1945 under the campaign chairmanship of Mr. Samuel Godfrey. New Year Greetings From Your Hydro

The new year is time to look forward with thoughts and plans for the future. The great upheaval that has swept the world in recent years is receding in the distance. It has left much that is disturbing in its wake . . . much disorganization and uncertainty. But that is characteristic of the passing of a storm. So this is a time to look forward and plan with confidence for a better and brighter future. In this, you and yours have the very best wishes of your Hydro.

It may well be that your plans include a new home, or improvement of your present home. In that case, it is timely to remind you that the best time to prepare to fully enjoy low-cost Hydro service is when you are building or altering a home. That is when ADEQUATE ELECTRIC WIRING is most easily and most economically installed. If wiring is skimped or needed circuits are overlooked at that time, years of inconvenience may be the penalty.

Reliable advice on adequate wiring may be had, free of charge, from your Hydro office anywhere in Ontario, or consult a good electrical contractor. Planning the wiring of your home adequately is a very good way to start a new year.

If you are building or improving your home, ask your Hydro office for the free 16-page booklet,

When I Think Of Seraye

By Milton Steinberg

I have been thinking a great deal of late about Seraye.

What, you will ask, is Seraye?

Seraye is a village situated in the Lithuanian County of Suwalki, just to the east of the old German frontier.

And what, to paraphrase Hamlet, is Seraye to me or I to Seraye?

Seraye, as it chances, is the town whence my family stems, where my father was born, from which he set forth at the ripe age of ten to continue his Talmudic studies at more conspicuous seats of learning, a venture which ended up, after many wanderings, physical and spiritual, in this land.

I say that I have been thinking about Seraye a great deal of late, and for a compelling reason. I cannot think about all of Europe's Jews, the six million dead, the one and a half million of walking skeletons. Such numbers are too large for me to embrace, the anguish they represent too vast for my comprehension. And so I think of Seraye instead.

Each of us has a Seraye, some place of origin abroad from which, as the case may be, we or our parents or grandparents or remoter forebears set out for the new world.

These Serayes may be in Germany or France or England or Hungary or Poland rather than Lithuania. They may be large cities rather than villages. In any event they are places towards which we feel some personal bond and [illegible], handles by which we may [illegible] the [illegible] of the agony of Europe to-day and of the great [illegible] against Europe's Jews.

Let me then speak to you of Seraye, and do you, as I speak, translate it into the equivalent of your own. So we will make real for ourselves the [illegible] and most terrible tragedy in all recorded time.

Let me confess here and now that, having been born in America, I have never seen Seraye [illegible] and yet I am well acquainted with it. I know it from the [illegible] of my father, from descriptions of similar towns in [illegible] "[illegible]" and [illegible] "World of [illegible]" [illegible] of its inhabitants and [illegible] of people it produced.

Seraye left something to be desired. Its houses were ramshackle, its streets unpaved. It was, all in all, a slum. It had its limitations, Seraye did, but it had its virtues also, and quite extraordinary virtues.

There was piety in Seraye, intense, pure and exalted.

There was learning in Seraye, and reverence for learning. Bread might be scarce there, but not books. That village of near beggars supported a system of universal schooling and maintained a scholarship at Volozhin, the great Talmudical Academy of the district.

What is more, the townspeople of Seraye, as befitted disciples of the Scriptural prophets and rabbinic sages, had a keen sense of justice, so keen that, according to an ancient practice, anyone who had been wronged was entitled to interrupt public worship, holding it suspended until the inequity had been righted.

And it was a merciful place. The poorest of Seraye, even those who themselves lived on alms, gave something regularly for sweet charity's sake. Nor was its philanthropy merely formal. It sprang rather from spontaneous compassion, from that sense of weltschmerz which created the Hebrew phrase: tzar baale hayyim, "the pain of all living things."

And it was a place of a great spiritual earnestness.

And now Seraye, at least the Jewish part of Seraye, is gone, wiped out, expunged by a ruthless hand almost to its last trace.

To be sure I have no specific information about its fate. We do not yet know in detail what befell towns like Vilna in Suwalki. How then shall we have heard concerning villages? And yet it is safe to venture a guess. After all, what[illegible] they went about destroying a [illegible], it is unlikely that they spared the tiny and insignificant [illegible] of [illegible] especially evil [illegible] wickedness.

Seraye is no more. Of that I am [illegible] the [illegible] synagogue where my ancestors for [illegible] generations worshipped God [illegible] the academy where my father studied [illegible]

The History of the Shoe

In the days of Queen Victoria, the middle-class becomes the dictator of fashions. It is the period of furbelows, trips to the sea, and sports. Men wear smoking-jackets, spats, and squarely-toed shoes, while women appear in patent-leather slippers or dainty Hessians. In fact, democracy in fashion is being felt.

Without the Slate it is not a Slater.

I want to be just like you, Mommie

When I grow up and have a little girl of my own, I'll always come and see her before I go to parties.

And I'll wear diamonds in my hair and long pink-marshmallow-color gloves and a wonderful fur coat — just like a fairy princess.

And my little girl will say, "my, isn't she pretty!" My little girl will say, "have a good time, have a very good time" . . . just as I'm saying to you, mommie.

My little girl will want to be just like me!

• We like to think we've helped fill the dreams of so many little girls (of so many big girls, too) with the beauty of fine furs. The place where you buy yours will be glad to help select the right fur for you. And like the most precious of your memories, the beauty of Hollander furs will last.

Insure Valuable Records Against Fire

Taylor Safes have survived unnumbered fires without loss. Many times they have been buried in fallen masonry and subjected to enormous weight as well as terrific heat. They have always come through with contents undamaged. Taylor Safes today include the improvements suggested by over three quarters of a century of experience.

GRAND'MERE
Jewish

We take this opportunity to thank you for your business and more particularly for your patience during the past few months during which time it has been impossible for us to supply you Grand'Mere shoes in large quantities. The leather situation is still acute, but we all hope that some improvement might take place soon.

In the meantime we are allocating our production as equitably as possible among our friends and customers, based on past purchases and you can rest assured of receiving your rightful share.

REPRESENTATIVES:

Alex. Dion, [illegible] 1st Avenue, Quebec City, Quebec.

have delayed delivery of buses from 4 to 5 months.

We must ask the public's kind understanding of present transportation problems. We are short of equipment — for new buses expected last May and maintenance parts and supplies necessary in keeping buses in operation are all delayed by strikes in the industries which provide them.

We are giving maximum service now with all available equipment. That service will be increased and improved as soon as urgently needed new supplies reach us.

CANADIAN JEWRY RECOGNIZES

Jewry, the fate of a people misremembered, daily mistaken for enemy when it is ally, and for foe when it is friend.

It is in the light of those facts that Canadian Jewry meets the New Year with two-fold determination. It pledges and rededicates itself, in the first place, to do all in its power, by deed and word, to alleviate the tragic plight of its brethren overseas. It recognizes, as a solemn duty, its obligation to help preserve the lives of the starved, the uprooted, the homeless; to aid them in the rebuilding of their broken lives, and to set them once again, upon the true paths of peace.

Above all, it recognizes, despite the error and misunderstanding it beholds in quarters where such were least to be expected, the imperative necessity not to give way to despair. Our people has not come up through all the centuries, surviving the malice, and what is often as hurtful, the shortsightedness of men, now to end in a blind alley of history! Certainly we cannot abandon, at this stage in our people's story, the hope that right, though temporarily obscured by dark counsel, will in the end emerge shining and triumphant, re-asserted, indeed, by that very same people which issued the Balfour Declaration. In a world which men of goodwill are seeking to build upon principles of justice, it cannot be otherwise: justice cannot be partial, but must be total affording to all peoples the essential requirements for self-fulfillment—home and security.

It is in hope and effort, therefore, and not in despair with its fatal concomitants, force or supineness, in which Canadian Jewry sees the outline of the days to come. With trust in God, and faith in the final sense of justice which must guide principled leaders of men, with confidence in the inevitable destiny of our people, and with the knowledge that the happiness of mankind is indivisible, Canadian Jewry faces the New Year.

of the Canadian Legion were the two participating groups, and over $500,000 was raised. Also through the efforts of the same Committee and the Welfare Fund Executive, a joint Committee representing the New Mount Sinai Hospital and New Jewish Home for the Aged Building Funds, the Jewish Family and Child Service, and the Welfare Fund is being set up to co-ordinate planning in the fields of health and care of the aged. A survey of our present services in these fields was conducted by Mr. Michael Freund, who at the time, was on the staff of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, and further study is in view, with the benefit of experts.

Important in this year's activity has been joint activity with the United Welfare Chest of Toronto. The Service Council is participating in the forthcoming Chest campaign. Members of the Welfare Fund Executive Committee, as citizens of the general community, are taking leadership in Chest year-round activities, a past president of the Welfare Fund, Mr. J. Irving Oelbaum, having lately been appointed as Chairman of the Policy Committee of the Welfare Council of the Chest.

Pressing problems for which the Welfare Fund is only beginning to plan are the need for further co-ordination and centralization of local educational institutions and Talmud Torahs and schules, their need for buildings in districts which have many Jewish families without Jewish educational facilities. The need for vocational guidance services for the Toronto Jewish community, especially for the youth, is being studied. This service is considered as pressing by organizations dealing with youth and returned servicemen.

Plans for a total community program for the sick, the chronic sick and the aged are just in their early beginnings. It is hoped that new buildings will be erected so that they supplement each other; that joint administration can be planned for the best possible service to the greatest number of people.

The fate of the 100,000 Jews in the Displaced Persons Camps in Europe at this moment is still undecided, but should the recommendations of the Anglo-American Commission be put into effect and these people admitted into Palestine, it is estimated that great sums will be needed for their resettlement.

This community, as all other communities, which have been spared the devastation of war, will have to be kept geared to emergencies, extending its assistance when and where needed. We have a task of education to do to reach every member of our community of 50,000. This is our goal for the coming year.

THE LACK OF TRAINED WORKERS

commendable initiative in correcting this situation. There are growing and well-equipped seminaries for teacher-training in the United States and now in Canada, and the attractions offered prospective students are indeed inviting and can be compared favorably with those in any other career.

The rabbinate, once a source not only of spiritual leaders but of executive workers for other fields as well, is a story in itself and one fairly well known so that it is unnecessary to dwell on it. But the field of community organization and functioning is another matter and one that will have to be given special attention.

We are slowly moving out of the error of confusing our social life in its positive and normal sense with social work in the sense of the problem cases of society, its sick, poor and maladjusted. The social workers in the latter sense, the group workers, the experts on delinquency, on relief administration, on family needs, on child care, etc., are finding their level in community life and a great hiatus still is left.

Each of our communities feels deeply the need of men who are not ordained and who are not initially conditioned favorably in the direction of one type of institution, who can foster the rounded development of the community as a whole, give the necessary inspiration to youth, without the aura of Mount Sinai, and lead the Jewish group toward desirable conditions of living which will satisfy the personal needs of the individual and fulfill its responsibilities towards the Jewish world outside. Such lay leaders are greatly needed and, as far as I know, no institution is concerned with their development.

By the same token there is an equivalent shortage of personnel for our national organizations. These require a broad view, a familiarity with community life, a sound Jewish background and the ability to place in perspective the various world-wide, national, community and personal problems. I do not know of one national organization which is not holding back on the implementation of at least one aspect of its program for lack of personnel. This lack is particularly felt in three phases of our group life which will be universally admitted to be vital.

In the field of so called public relations, the group relationship between the Jewish community and our non-Jewish neighbours, the need is growing. If anti-Semitism is not a growing force on this continent, and elsewhere, certainly our awareness of it is, and our determination to cope with it in self-defence, self-respect and as a service to the nation. It may be the relative newness of this form of the problem or the youth of the community, but the fact remains that we have had all too few men who have a thorough knowledge of Canada, or the United States, society and of Jewish affairs as well as the necessary personal qualities of diplomacy, influence, and leadership to develop and impose a mode of interrelationship between Jews and non-Jews. Blotters, pamphlets and advertisements aside, it must be admitted we are only at the threshold of the problem. And this is not for lack of interest or support. It is a case of supply not coming forth to meet the demand.

In the same way the community's concept of education is developing faster than men come forward to implement it. It is increasingly realized that Jewish education does not consist of the ability to read Hebrew without understanding it or a fluency in the Kaddish. Nor is a Yiddish letter to grandmother the climax of post-graduate Jewish education. As our community matures we are becoming aware of the maturity of our culture and its values for the adult Jew. More and more is there growing awareness of the desiderata of adult education for the community, but each day with its passing only diminishes the number of those able to work in this field.

The problem of youth work is related. Nobody is more painfully conscious of this than the leaders of our youth centres. The complexities of this work are numerous, its requirements high and the opportunities of systematic training practically non-existent. On the other hand, it is almost universally recognized that unless this lack is resolved there can be but little hope for the development of a balanced and devoted Jewry on this continent.

All this points the direction to advanced training for Jewish public service, a field of occupation which is offering increasing attractions for those who enter it with the desire to serve their people. These attractions go beyond reasonable salaries, there is general recognition of the services which one is able to render and the field offers personal satisfactions which are in the final analysis the surest element in vocational guidance.

In conclusion I might repeat the old tale which is current in Yeshivah circles. When one of the founders of a famous seminary proposed the setting up of this institution which would train hundreds of young men he was asked, "But what will we do with these hundreds of rabbis after they graduate?" He answered, "I do not want hundreds of rabbis. I want a few rabbis but hundreds of laymen who will know a rabbi when they see one."

"If I were not an optimist, I'd tell you what they are thinking of us back home," Dr. Hermann said. "While they have suffered hunger and persecution, we have been sitting here pretty safely. Besides, the people who now have our houses and businesses won't be very happy to have to turn them back to us. If there is anything left—." He stopped abruptly.

"But why shouldn't there be anything left, Dr. Hermann?" old Mrs. Reiner asked. She looked perturbed.

"The wind has changed," Dr. Hermann said. "Now it blows from the East. The more I see of it, the less I like it." He sighed and got up. "Well, I must be running along. I'm going to see Lilian Harvey in one of her old movies. They play it on Eighty-sixth Street. Next week, they'll play 'Zwei Herzen im Dreivierteltakt.' Ruku libam, milostiva pani." He kissed Mrs. Reiner's hand and bowed to Reiner and left.

They stared after him in silence; then old Mrs. Reiner took her son's hand and asked, "Edi, why did he say, 'If there is anything left'?" She stared into her son's face, intently.

Reiner shrugged. "Hermann likes to be theatrical. He is a good lawyer, but he's never had any vision," he said, with the superior calm that had been widely admired at his bank during market crises. "He simply doesn't know what he is talking about. As soon as things settle down a little, I'll go to Washington and get our visas. Let's go, Mother. Time for you to get home."

During the summer and early fall, Reiner often took his mother over to Riverside Park, where they sat on a bench in a quiet side lane while he read the papers to her. He was a subscriber to the New-Yorkse Listy, the Czech language daily, and the Aufbau, a German-language weekly. During the war, when one couldn't write or receive any letters from overseas, the papers had been the most vital link between themselves and the world they had known. When he had read to his mother about the V-bomb terror in London, she had said, "Poor Leo and Lucie. First they had so much trouble getting into England, and now all those horrible things." The strained situation in Palestine gave Mrs. Reiner occasion to worry about Agnes Keller, her dearest friend, in Tel Aviv. When the papers reported the gallant stand of the Czechoslovak Brigade in Ruthenia, she had said, "God bless our little nephew Robert. He is with them, isn't he? It's hard to realize that Robert must be nineteen now. I still see him come to our house every Saturday. He always got strawberry jam smeared all over his mouth. Marie gave it to him. Marie gave him everything he wanted. She spoiled him too much." Marie had been their cook for eighteen years. She was a gruff old misanthrope and an excellent cook. Reiner had said, "I wonder, Mother, whether Marie is still in the house!" And his mother had replied, "Of course she is. I told her to wait there and she promised me."

The news from Prague had been bad enough during the war, but it scarcely improved, the Reiners felt, in the autumn that followed the war's end. Several of their relatives had vanished. They had been deported to Poland and most probably had died in concentration camps. Czechoslovakia was free again and Benes was back in Prague, but, reading the newspaper stories, Reiner couldn't help having a feeling of hopelessness — something he had never known before, not even in the darkest days, when one still knew that things couldn't always remain like that. Even more disturbing than the newspaper stories—of Benes signing decrees about the partition of all large estates and the nationalization of all mines, utilities, and foundries employing more than five hundred people—had been the letters from people in Europe and from people who went back to find that they weren't welcome any longer, from people who were afraid to go back.

Reiner had been so shocked and bewildered and frightened by these reports and rumors that when news came of the requisitioning of the large farm he owned outside of Prague, he had been almost indifferent. He ceased to care about the bank, too. He hadn't even been upset when he heard that the bank, his bank, now housed the headquarters of the Czechoslovak Communist Party. All he wanted was the old house. His mother would never be happy anywhere else. As soon as postal communications were restored, he had written to Dr. Hudec, asking him about the house and his paintings. "We intend to return in the near future," he had said.

"He will answer at once by air mail," Reiner had told his mother. He had sounded as though Dr. Hudec were still his bank's counsel, always at the Herr Direktor's disposal. But after weeks of waiting for an answer to the letter and to two subsequent cables, Reiner had begun to wonder whether something hadn't happened to Hudec—though even in such a case his office should have answered immediately. Then one afternoon, Dr. Hermann had called at the Reiners' apartment with news of Hudec. "He's managed to make the half-left turn," Dr. Hermann said. "I've just had a letter with news about him. It seems that he's done much better than before '38. And I can remember the days when he, in person, accompanied the sheriff, trying to attach someone's personal belongings for a measly two-hundred-koruny judgment, because he couldn't afford any office help. There is another postwar career for you."

Old Mrs. Reiner had grasped her son's hand. "Do you think something may be wrong, Edi?" she asked. "Perhaps some people live in our house and they don't want to move out—."

"Don't worry, Mother," Reiner had said. "I'll send Hudec a cable today." He didn't say anything about the two cables he had already sent.

Dr. Hudec's answer finally came by mail a few weeks later. It spoke of the "generally unsettled conditions" that made it difficult—at the moment, at least—to have any definite news. Of course, he was undertaking "so far as is feasible" to safeguard Reiner's claims. What puzzled Reiner more than the coolly impersonal tone of the letter was a postscript it bore. Dr. Hudec had always had the irritating habit of putting the most important item of a letter in a postscript. It read, "Under the circumstances, I cannot conscientiously recommend that you consider returning now or in the near future."

The old woman gazed at her son. "What does he write, Edi?" she asked. From the North River came the sound of a tugboat's whistle. She leaned out of the window and looked toward Riverside Park. "It must be lovely in our Stromovka gardens now," she said. "Funny, when I look out from here, I think I always see the banks of the Vltava and the Stromovka and, somewhere in the rear, the Hradcany Castle." She sighed.

Reiner looked at her, the frail body silhouetted against the window frame, and beyond her the walls of a tall, ugly apartment house, and then he looked at the letter again. "Dr. Hudec writes that everything is fine," he said. "Just a couple of months, Mother, until we get our passports and papers, and we will be back in our old house."

by formulas or programs or party limitations. The Return to Zion was a vision to be filled with realities through the work of Redemption. The definition of a far objective was an approximation and not a finality. That is why it was always possible for Weizmann to turn from the discussion of theory to the redemption of the soil, the building of a school, the resettlement of a colony, the solidarity reflected in a national fund or enterprise, as the most effective reflection of the spirit of Zionism.

He has been the one personality in the Zionist movement through whom all groups and categories could find a way of cooperation, and in whom all sensed a mystic kinship dissolving the walls of prejudice. It was this conception that made it possible for Dr. Weizmann to persuade non-Zionists in England, in Germany, and in the United States, to join in the building of a Jewish Palestine.

The Jewish Agency, organized with such pomp and ceremony in Zurich in 1929, was destined to have no luck.-Louis Marshall died soon after the adjournment of the conference. His death was preceded by the bloodiest riots ever witnessed in Palestine. The year 1929 saw the beginning of the rapid deterioration of Zionism and of all Jewish life. The Passfield White Paper was the first of the black papers in which was registered the effort of England to escape the obligations of the Mandate. The report of the Peel Commission in 1937 suggested the partition of Palestine. That failing, the White Paper of 1939 was as the final act of desperation.

The survival of leadership during this period of disintegration would have been a miracle. Weizmann realized that Jews had no power to restrain a world bent on self-destruction. He saw the forces of democracy browbeaten and defeated by the arrogant Nazis in every political encounter. He saw the League of Nations dismantled, its ideals abandoned.

But this was not the temper of the Zionist movement. It did not want so easily to be reconciled to what seemed to be the inevitable. It wanted to be heard in the world It wanted its frustrations and despairs, its indignations and protests registered in its leadership. It was exasperated by speculations and long-distance faith. It refused to make terms with reality, protesting against God and Man, even while knowing the futility of protest.

Thus, in Zurich in 1931, Weizmann was forced to retire from office, the victim of Jewish frustration. Morally as well as politically, however, he continued as leader during the four years he was not the president of the organization. He went to South Africa for the Keren Hayesod. He became the head of the Aliyah of German refugees. He appeared at the World Fair in Chicago. In 1939, an overwhelming majority of the Zionist Congress invited him to return as president.

That moment was decisive in Weizmann's life. It was a moment of heroic decision. The crown of marytrdom was being offered to him. He knew that an almost hopeless situation faced him. It was to be a war that would be total in its effects.

Weizmann will be remembered for his heroic endurance during this period of travail—his proud and noble bearing, and the tirelessness of his effort. He made his memorable address to the Royal Commission. He was called upon to make the hazardous decisions regarding the proposal for the partition of Palestine. It was to him the White Paper of 1939 was sent. He suffered the humiliation of English officials turning Jewish victims of the war away from the shores of the Promised Land to perish in the sea. He was given private promises of sympathy and friendship never publicly announced, or long delayed. He saw the failure of every political mission he undertook.

His refuge was the Rock of his Faith. Along the narrow path of a receding Mandate, the national home had become visible, potent, exciting. Its 47,000 of 1917 became almost 600,000 in 1944. The malaria-ridden pioneers had produced a generation that had gone out on the battle-fields to die for Jewish honor.

The great university on Mount Scopus was the centre of a network of high schools, technical institutes, agricultural schools, primary schools and kindergartens. The Hebrew language had broadened out and was now the full-throated expression of the newborn freedom of a free people. They had become the builders of an arsenal of great resources, which was placed at the disposal of the United Nations.

The statesmen had failed to keep the promise, but not the martyred Jewish people. Once, when defending these statesmen, Weizmann asked the question: "What have you, the Jewish people, done to take advantage of the promise?"

Thus, at more than the age of threescore and ten, firm of body and clear of mind—the master of his indignation and the slave of no mean prejudices—Chaim Weizmann has lived to see the moment when his faith in statesmanship will be justified in fulfillment or sealed in frustration for generations to come.

He lived to see the bankrupt leadership of Neville Chamberlain supplanted by the great leadership of Winston Churchill, in whom England had renewed its strength, had recovered its hold on its eternal heritage of freedom and democracy; and summoning all kindred forces of earth to rally against the enemy, had finally driven that enemy back to his lair, no longer the Invincible Fortress, but the Shambles of Defeat and Dishonor.

All these years, Chaim Weizmann has clung in confidence to the great moral strength of the England of the Magna Carta, the mother of Parliaments, the England that had given birth to Balfour. He suffered for that faith. He was derided for it. He was shamefully abused for it. When England was condemned, he was humiliated. When it met the test of loyalty, he was exalted. May his faith be justified in his lifetime.

which overtook them — I do not want to think of them. Especially I do not want to think of how most of them were done to death.

Yet think of them I must.

For, some of those Jews still live.

These surviving Jews haunt me.

In the first place, I cannot figure out why they are they and I am I. Through what merit of mine am I safe, secure, free and light in heart whenever I watch my wife going about her household duties or hear my children laugh as they play? And what was their offence that they are cold, naked, hungry, haunted by horror? I simply cannot puzzle out what sin they committed so horrible as to merit the torments meted out to them; to look on while one's wife disappears into a death train or gas chamber, to see one's children spitted on bayonets, or to ponder their slow starvation, their bellies waxing great with bloatedness, their arms and legs turning match-stick thin, their bodies growing feeble with lassitude until life and death can no longer be told apart.

That is what haunts me; the thought that there, but for the grace of God and a capricious decision made by my father, but in any case through no virtue of mine, there go I, there my wife, there my children.

Of the twenty Jewish survivors of Seraye, three want to go back. After all, one cannot stay in an internment camp forever. And who knows, perhaps in Seraye by some miracle one will come upon a dearly beloved and long despaired wife or mother or child or friend. Perhaps something remains of one's former home, or shop, or library or synagogue.

Then, too, there is the unfinished fight for freedom in Seraye — including freedom for Jews.

Besides, Seraye is home.

These three need to be sustained now. Once they set out for home they will need more—provender on the way, protection from anti-Semites as they travel, Polish anti-Semites whom the Polish government has been unable to suppress, and Lithuanian anti-Semites whom not even the Soviet Army has brought to heel.

When they arrive at Seraye, the odds are the husband, wife, brother, friend will not be there. The home will be gone, the shop gone, the synagogue gone.

Then they will begin to require our help in earnest. They will need houses, shops, books, tools and since not so many as ten Jews are left to form a minyan, they will need a synagogue at least in Suwalki, the county seat.

Of Seraye's Jews, seventeen will not go back to Seraye.

They will not go back for any one of many reasons; because they know that nothing remains in Seraye to which to return; because they can never again trust their neighbours who joined with the Nazis against them; because the streets of Seraye cry aloud of rape, murder and torture; because, despite all the efforts of the Red Army, there is more anti-Semitism in Seraye to-day than ever; because they are tired of defending themselves and apologizing for themselves; because they want to live normal lives.

Whatever the reason, they will not go back to Seraye.

Of these seventeen Jews, three have set their hearts on America. Though thanks to the quota system, only one will be so fortunate as ever to get here.

But for that one, American Jewry must be prepared, not only for its own sake but so that other lands may be encouraged also to open their doors to homeless Jews.

And as for the rest, fourteen out of twenty, they will go to one place, and one place only—to the land of their father, the place where refuge was promised to them by the nations of the world, to the Jewish Homeland, Eretz Yisrael.

Some are going to Palestine because there is literally no other place on earth for them; others because that is the only place where they are really wanted; still others because, long before the World War most of them had been made Zionists by the Jewish tradition, by the dream of a Judaism reborn and of historic Jewish ideals incarnated in the land which first gave them birth.

They will get through. And when they do, we shall be able to rest more easily. Not only will they know at last what it means to be welcome and wanted, they will be participants in one of the most brilliant, creative and idealistic enterprises of modern times, the rebuilding of the Jewish National Home in Palestine.

Such are my thoughts of Seraye.

With them and in their wake come all sorts and conditions of feelings.

Sometimes, when I think about Seraye, I am ashamed to be a human being, ashamed to be a member of a species which could perpetrate the evil done to Seraye, and almost as much ashamed of the supposedly good people of the world who stood by when the evil was being perpetrated, and who stand idle now.

Sometimes, when I think of Seraye, I want to hurl hard words at God, that terrible saying of Abraham: "Shall the Judge of the whole earth not do justice?" that soul-searing inquiry of the prophet:

"Thou, too pure of eyes to behold evil,
Thou that canst look on oppression,
Wherefore has thou looked on when men did treachery
And did hold Thy peace when the wicked swallowed up the righteous?"

Sometimes, on the other hand, I want to slip into some synagogue and say Kaddish, the prayer for the dead, not the familiar Kaddish but the Kaddish shel-Hasidim the Saints' Kaddish, as solemn as the other but with its grief more brightly illuminated by hope. I want to stand up and cry out over Seraye, over its dead, over its handful of living:

Yitgadal v'yitkaddash shmeh rabbah b'olmo di hu atid lehithadata. . . .

"Magnified and sanctified be God's great name, in the world which He is to create anew, in which the dead will live, and life be eternal, and Jerusalem be rebuilt, and its shrine restored and heathenism be uprooted and the worship of the true God be set in its place, when the Holy One blessed be He, will establish His Kingdom . . ."

Baagalah uvizman kariv va-imru amen.

"Speedily and at a near time, and say ye, Amen."

Such are the mingled emotions that attend my thoughts of Seraye. But through them all moves a two-fold resolution that is always with me, that never falters nor fails, no matter what else I may be thinking or feeling.

I am resolved that, so far as lies within my power, those Jews of Seraye shall, at long last, have justice done them.

Which means, that those who want to go back to Seraye shall have the right to do so without hindrance, and shall enjoy security, freedom and equality, when they have come home at last; which means further that those on the other hand who want to go to Palestine shall have that right without hindrance and shall enjoy security, freedom and equality when they have come home at last.

This is one resolution.

And the other is that, so far as lies within my power, those Jews shall have everything they require to survive and to rebuild their lives; that at no moment, if I can prevent it, will they lack for food, clothing, shelter, medical and psychiatric care or the things that minister to the spirit.

Shall I attempt to catch in two words, almost two gestures, all the complex, subtle, terrible and exalted things I think and feel when I think of Seraye and its Jews, living and dead—thoughts and feelings which I know you share since you would not otherwise be worthy to be fashioned in human form or to be called Jews?

We feel together, you and I, the will to fight and the will to give, to fight until justice is accomplished, to give until mercy is done.

These then are our final and deepest thoughts in all our thinking about Seraye, your Seraye and mine.

Anti-Semitism In Canada

By Peter Irvin Browne, In Feuilles Démocratiques

There are many people, I am well aware, who resent being told that there is a Jewish problem right here in Canada; many there are who do not believe it. Ever ready to pick the mote out of their neighbor's eye, they forget the beam that is in their own. Astounded and shocked at the humiliation, cruelty, frustration and degradation of the Jews at the hands of Hitler and other Fascist tyrants, they nevertheless comfort their timid and myopic souls that in Canada at least: "It cannot happen here!"

Let us not be too sure of that. For the present, Jew-baiting certainly isn't in fashion, but one of the poisonous legacies of the war just concluded is the bitterness that has been left behind, between race and race and group and group. News despatches coming from Poland and bearing all the marks of authenticity, allege that the Poles at last delivered from the iron boot of Himmler have themselves turned upon the helpless Jews, have attempted to segregate, expel and destroy the almost pitiful remnant of Jewry which had escaped the firing squad or the gas-chamber of the Gestapo. In other words, it might seem that the Poles after gallantly fighting Fascism have unwittingly acquired something of a Fascist mentality.

But, lest like Neville Chamberlain we are not unduly interested in a "country of Central Europe", let us take a look at England from whose loins many of us have sprung. A short time ago, in the very heart of London there foregathered a group of citizens who for very good reasons had not dared to show their heads for several years; they were the misguided followers of a certain Oswald Mosley, self-styled Fuehrer of the British Fascist Party, interned during the war and later released on the plea of ill-health. Apparently, these victims of cheap catchwords and demagogic slogans assembled peacefully enough, but they did nothing to hide the fact that they were still full of hate, dripping with it, dropsical in mind and soul, driven by fear (for fear is at the bottom of most hatreds) of the Jew and so-called international conspiracy to rule the world! In England, that home of tolerance, it must be admitted that such people as these are numerically almost negligible; but what is significant is the presence of even one person who could allow himself to be bedevilled by such nauseating hate. Hitler studied better than he knew. William Joyce went to his death at Wandsworth Prison, recalcitrant, unashamed, reiterating the same old lie that the Jews were destroying the world.

But let us come nearer home. The other day, in an idle moment, I was speaking to a Canadian-born citizen, of English (not of French) descent, a college professor, and therefore presumably an "educated" man. We were discussing some of the current economic problems of the day, when he observed mildly enough: "Of course, the fault lies with the Jews." Somewhat surprised at this remark by a man whom I had always regarded as a good democrat, I asked him to elucidate, to furnish me with some details. It must be confessed that he was not very articulate, but I gathered that he believed that here in Canada the Jew was the instigator of civil discord "because he was not a good citizen." Pressed still further as to his definition of a good citizen, his reply was to the effect that (a) the Jew was noisy and ill-mannered; (b) that he was first and foremost a Jew and only in a secondary sense a Canadian; (c) that he was rich; (d) that he did not cultivate the "Christian" virtues (!); (e) that he had a controlling interest in the clothing trade, in the cinema business, in the newsvendors stands, in the fruit trade and so on and so forth, ad nauseam.

Our enlightened readers will recognize this particular clap-trap as pure and unadulterated rationalization, a fault to which many of us are far too prone: we spend much time in finding fault with others because subconsciously we ourselves are aware that the onus of our own failures, our own disappointments, our own envious longings, is weighing very heavily on our ego. James Harvey Robinson expressed this very clearly when he said: "Rationalizing is the self-exculpation which occurs when we feel ourselves, or our group, accused of misapprehension or error."

It might, therefore, be profitable to examine the charge made by this college professor with the ersatz education, in the light of the dictum just quoted. It then appears that this "good" Canadian citizen is not quite sure of his own manners; not altogether easy on that score, he finds a scapegoat—the Jews; true, there are many noisy and ill-mannered Jews. But fairness demands that we frankly admit there are many noisy and ill-mannered French and English Canadians; no nationality has a corner in charm and good-breeding; most nationalities under the impact of war have rationed their manners at the same time as they rationed their sugar and butter.

The second charge was to the effect that the Jew was only secondarily a Canadian. Lamentable and astounding as it might appear to a foreigner visiting these shores, most of us hitherto have been Canadians as an afterthought; our loyalty has been to Quebec, to the Catholic Church, to the Orange Order, to Ontario, to England, to our own little group: Let him that is without sin cast the first stone. Let us all be Canadians, first and foremost, and many of our present discontents will fast fade away.

As to the charge that the Jew was rich, even Macaulay's schoolboy would hoot with derision; some Jews are rich, others pitifully poor; some Christians are rich, but many are not. But we who are envious of other men's possessions conceal our real feelings under a cloak of emotionalism, hie ourselves forth on crusades, stir up the dust and the mud, make ourselves unpleasant and sometimes get what we want.

Had Karl Marx owned more of the world's goods, the history of the twentieth century might have taken a different course; if French-Canada had been economically better situated in relation to Anglo-Canadians, the St. Jean Baptiste Society and the Order of Jacques Cartier would not have had the same emotional appeal to those of frustrated soul in Canada's Ancient Province.

The next item in the indictment is perhaps the strangest of all. What are the Christian virtues indeed but tolerance, goodwill and love of one's neighbor? Possess these and all the rest will follow. The ethical code of the Jewish race differs in no respect whatsoever from that taught by Christ; dogmas may be poles asunder, but ethically the Jew and the Christian are on the same road to Heaven, though at times it would almost appear as if the follower of Christ is a long way behind, when it comes to loving one's neighbor and practising that spirit of tolerance which has been preached by wise men, both Jews and Christians, throughout the ages.

As for the last item, a perusal of figures and statistics in the various trade-journals, yearbooks and such like publications will reveal that no one race has a controlling interest in any particular branch of Canada's economic life unless it be the Anglo-Canadian, and this through sheer force of numbers. All races have some interest in some aspect of our economic life, according to their numbers and their financial resources. The Red Indian alone would seem to be the one excluded.

Nor to a man whose mind is free should it matter very much whether Jews, English, Irish, Scots or French climb high through native talent and hand work in any particular industry; they are all Canadians, they are all working in the service of the public producing articles to be consumed, employing labor, keeping the wheels going round, contributing to our common prosperity. What does matter is that we, as Canadians, should disembarrass our minds of all our racial and religious prejudices; we cannot, as Edmund Burke once said, "indict a whole nation", nor can we ever really prosper as a sovereign people if we allow crowd psychology and mob thinking to push to the wall the freedom-loving citizens whose only wish is to live at peace with his neighbor.

Canada has, indeed, no room for those unstable, irrational, credulous and stupid souls, however well educated they may appear to be, who are—whether they know it or not—disciples and henchman of Adolph Hitler.

Orphaned Literatures: They Must Be Saved Through English

By Dr. Solomon Grayzel, Editor, The Jewish Publication Society Of America

The problem of the orphans which now faces us is a measure of the Jewish tragedy during World War II. The unspeakable Nazis made Jewish children the special target of their fury, so that the efforts and self-sacrifice of many Jews and honest Christians were able to save only a pitifully small number of them. One cannot tell, moreover, how many of even this small number will retain their Jewishness. Only those who have been or will be transported to Palestine, or possibly to the United States, can be considered as having been saved for Jewish life.

The needs of these orphans are fairly clear and one may confidently trust that the philanthropically-minded Jews will allay at least their physical distress. There is another type of orphan, however, whose very existence is sometimes overlooked, namely, the orphaned literatures, whose fate and future parallel closely that of the orphans of flesh and blood.

Books, too, were the targets of Nazi fury, for in them also the Nazis saw a promise of Jewish survival. As soon as they gained control of a country, the Germans, therefore, confiscated Jewish books, which they kept in huge collections—something in the nature of literary concentration camps—for the day when they would have the leisure to work their will upon them. The avowed aim of the Nazis was to turn some of this literature against the Jews themselves and to throw into the flames such other books as they would be unable to misinterpret.

Fortunately, they did not have time to achieve their aim completely, so that vast storehouses of Jewish books have been uncovered by the liberation armies. We have a situation, therefore, where the creators and owners of this literature—its parents, so to speak—are no more, and the literature itself is as orphaned as some of the children who are now the responsibility of the Jews of the world.

This is not the first time in Jewish history that an entire literature has been orphaned. It happened once before, towards the beginning of the Common Era. A literature of a high order had long been developing among the Greek-speaking Jews of Egypt and the lands of the eastern Mediterranean. Their books of poetry, history and philosophy were having a profound influence upon pagans as well as Jews, preparing the mind of the pagan world for the acceptance of those Jewish ideals which lie at the basis of Christianity. The name of the philosopher Philo, for example, comes prominently to mind in this connection.

But the time came when, for a variety of historical reasons, Greek-speaking Jews fell victim to physical force and to assimilation. That vast community disintegrated and disappeared, leaving its entire literature literally orphaned. The other Jewries of the world failed to adopt it, that is, they refused or neglected to translate it and thus make it part of their own culture. Most of this Hellenistic Jewish literature therefore was forgotten; it vanished; it died of neglect. Only here and here did a fragment or an idea survive, and only those books or parts of books which the Christians found useful have come down the ages.

About a thousand years later, a somewhat similar situation resulted from conditions in Spain. Here an Arabic-speaking Jewish community reached its cultural height between the eighth and the thirteenth centuries. Fortunately, in view of what happened later, this community cherished the Hebrew as well as the Arabic tongues, so that many of its literary treasures were written in a language which it had in common with the other Jews of the world and their survival was never in question.

But its men of thought and letters used Arabic too. Thus, Solomon ibn Gabirol, the great Hebrew poet, wrote a theological work, The Fountain Of Life, in Arabic; and more than a century later Maimonides wrote his Guide to the Perplexed in the same language. The time soon came when Arabic ceased to be the spoken language of Spain either among the Jews or the Christians, and again an entire segment of Jewish literature was orphaned.

Some of it, to be sure, was translated into Hebrew, adopted, so to speak, by the rest of the Jews; but a great deal of it no doubt perished. Ibn Gabirol's work, mentioned above, was saved from complete oblivion by being translated into Latin and converted to the use of the Church. Its Jewish origin was forgotten until a century ago, when modern scholarship revealed its true parentage.

A similar danger, but of double intensity, confronts us at the present time. Two Jewish literatures which have been generations in developing, both of which represent some of the finest aspects of the Jewish cultural tradition, have been orphaned before our very eyes. One is the German Jewish literature, with its emphasis on the philosophical and historical; the other is the Polish Jewish literature, with its charm, its subtlety, its deep piety and its profound understanding of the human spirit. The one was written mostly in German; the other for the most part in Yiddish. There will certainly not be another German-speaking Jewish community and, to the regret of some of us, there is not likely to be a Yiddish-speaking community in the foreseeable future. The literatures in these languages, representing a substantial part of Jewish cultural life, are thus threatened with extinction, to our hurt and to the loss of human culture in general.

It is therefore pertinent to ask whether we, who are conscious of our duty to the physical descendants of the destroyed Jewish communities, have no responsibility to the descendents of their spirit and intellect. The obvious thing for the Jews of the United States and of Palestine to do is to embark on a vast salvaging undertaking in the form of translations and adaptations. Our duty is to make all that is worth while in these literatures available in English

800,000 Must Get Homes In Three Years, Warns La Guardia

Fiorello H. La Guardia, Director General of the UNRRA, told the United Nations that it should ask every country in the world, "How many refugees will you take?"

The question should be asked in simple language that all the parliaments and congresses of the world can understand, Mr. La Guardia said. Seated beside the delegates, at Lake Success, N.Y., he advised the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations to solve the war's refugee problem within three years.

Mr. La Guardia, with humor, sentiment and force, urged the council to "action" in the refugee problem, rather than resolutions —in which good intentions were lost in the "whereases," he said. Conveying the message of UNRRA from its recent conference in Geneva, the director general offered all UNRRA's refugee administration facilities to the United Nations, from personnel files to money. However, if the United Nations does not create the International Refugee Organization before July 1, 1947, since UNRRA will be dissolved on June 30, the IRO will not obtain "one penny" of unexpended UNRRA funds, he warned.

As Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, has urged, Mr. La Guardia, too, advised the Economic and Social Council to create an interim refugee organization "immediately" to prevent any lapse of UNRRA's work.

If the refugee problem cannot be solved in three years, Allied efforts to build a decent post-war world will have been "in vain." Mr. La Guardia cautioned. About 300 persons in the public gallery, mainly young persons, listened attentively.

"The welfare of every nation is the concern of all," Mr. La Guardia said solemnly. "Once the United Nations gets into the economics of this world, what now appear to be serious international issues will disappear.

"We have learned," he said, "that all that nations ask is the right to live." Reminiscing on his experiences as Mayor of New York, he added that providing for the destitute was "one of the highest functions of government." The world contains enough food for everyone; and soon, the Food and Agriculture Organization will recommend a revolutionary method of controlling supply, disturbing to century-old trade practices, he declared.

In describing the world refugee problem, Mr. La Guardia said that nearly 800,000 refugees would be repatriated but that the others required the "slow, costly, heartbreaking" business of resettlement in countries other than those of their origin.

Other countries must be expected to open their gates to all such refugees, excepting the physically or mentally unfit, Mr. La Guardia said. While no compulsion would be used to force refugees to return to their native lands where, for political reasons, they no longer wished to live, "persuasion" would be used to induce refugees to return, if only false propaganda were responsible for their opposition to repatriation he declared.

The problem is worsened by mental confusion among refugees resulting from barrages of propaganda addressed to them; from a "buck-passing" division of responsibility between UNRRA and military authorities, and from the refusal of certain refugee repatriation officers of Polish and Yugoslav nationality themselves to return to their own countries, as they should advise refugees to do, the Director General related.

Has UNRRA itself asked various countries how many refugees they would receive, as Mr. La Guardia suggested the United Nations should do? M. René Hoffherr, French representative, asked Mr. La Guardia.

ORPHANED LITERATURES

for the benefit of the diaspora Jewries which from now on will be mostly English-speaking.

We have long talked of the growing cultural maturity of the American Jews, and no one would argue that our own progress should be arrested for a moment, while we divert our energies to keping other Jewish literatures alive. On the contrary, the present situation offers a challenge to our cultural self-respect and a test of our cultural strength—a challenge thrown down to us by the enemy when it sought to destroy two of our most important literary traditions, and a test of our ability to transmute ideas and values developed in a different environment into cultural forces that can be absorbed into our own life and strengthen American Jewish life in time to come.

There is no denying that any practical approach to the problem of saving these orphaned literatures presents many difficulties, quite apart from the financial one. As an example, it may be well to point to an undertaking already in progress.

No group has been more conscious of American Jewry's duty in this respect than the leadership of The Jewish Publication Society. Though the means at their disposal are limited, these men felt that at least a beginning must be made in saving the cultural orphans of the European Jews. The vexing question of where to begin was solved for the Society by considerations of sentiment and communal expediency—it decided to start with Heinrich Graetz's twelve-volume Geschichte der Juden.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an ivory-colored satin gown, fashioned with a sweetheart neckline, long pointed sleeves, fitted bodice, and a full skirt ending in a train. She had a rosepoint headdress, and carried a small cascade of bouvardia and orchids. Miss Joan Jacobs was maid of honor in a gown of powder-blue brocaded moire, and matching bandeau of ostrich feathers, and carried a nosegay of mixed pastel-shaded flowers. Louis P. The bride and groom later left for their honeymoon, the bride travelling in a brown gabardine suit, matching stitched hat, beige top coat with brown broadtail trimming, and brown kid accessories.

More than 9,360 pounds of dried whole milk, the approximate equivalent of one glass of milk for each surviving Jewish child in continental Europe, have been contributed at Los Angeles, Cal., to the Joint Distribution Committee's SOS (Supplies for Overseas Survivors) Collection. On the basis of one pound of dried whole milk for every gallon of fluid milk, and at 16 glasses to a gallon, the 9,360 pounds will provide 149,760 glasses of milk, or approximately one for each of the estimated 150,000 Jewish children who survive out of a pre-war total of 1,200,090.

According to official statistics 40,000 visa-less immigrants entered Palestine since 1939.

Jan Pietrowski, Warsaw radio commentator, said the King David Hotel bombing was a protest against British policy in Palestine and would delay the transfer of Jewish survivors there for a decade.

He was in charge of the activities of the J.D.C. in the American Zone of Germany and just before his return made a survey tour of Czechoslovakia, investigating in particular the conditions along the route taken by Jews fleeing from Poland to Germany. Mr. Becker paid tribute to the Czechoslovakian Government for its assistance to these refugees but said that he had "never seen such unhappy, disturbed, fearful, fleeing Jews as at this border crossing. It's an appalling experience to see suckling babes, old men and women, four-year olds tramping the woods like adults, creeping with a terrible fear lest any misstep betray them."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an old-fashioned gown of ice-blue slipper satin, fashioned with a net yoke, studded with seed pearl beads, short sleeves, fitted bodice, and a full skirt extending into a slight train. Her finger-tip length veil, edged with Brussels lace, fell from a headdress of ostrich plumes to match her gown, and she had mittens of the same color. She carried a cascade of American Beauty roses and stephanotis, and had a string of pearls, a gift of the groom. Mrs. Ted Locker, as matron of honor for her sister, wore an ankle-length dinner gown of pale aquamarine blue crepe, fashioned with a side drape, and trimmed at the neck and sleeves with matching beads, and carried a bouquet of Talisman roses. Parochial School Has Everything

A parochial school has been opened by Anshe Emet (Conservative) Synagogue, in Chicago, Ill., whose rabbi, Solomon Goldman, a former president of the Zionist Organization of America, is one of the leading rabbis of the U. S.

The Anshe Emet Day School offers a curriculum of general and Jewish subjects, under the supervision of the eminent educator and specialist in child development work, Miss Miriam Brubaker, and Albert Elazar, Director of Education of the Anshe Emet Synagogue.

The advisory council of the school includes two distinguished educators, Professor Stephen Corey, of the University of Chicago, and Professor Eldridge McSwain, of Northwestern University. Other prominent educators will soon be added to this advisory council.

The School schedule includes supervised rest and recreational programs and will have the services of a staff of skilled and eminent pediatricians. Classroom equipment has been selected with a view to comfort, modernity and the aesthetic needs of growing children. A hot luncheon is served daily under the supervision of a trained dietician. Bus transportation to and from school is provided.

REFUGEE SOLDIER WINS ESSAY PRIZE

A man who "knew" Nazi concentration camps, a religious teacher both in Germany and America, Pvt. Henry O. Bernstein has been awarded the camp commander's prize for the best essay submitted in a camp contest at Camp Lee, Virginia. The camp paper's story of Pvt. Bernstein's award was headed: "Rabbi Who Knew Nazis Deems KP A Privilege."

The camp commander, Maj. Gen. James E. Edmonds, was publisher of the New Orleans Times-Picayune before entering service. The text of Pvt. Bernstein's essay, titled "Only Those Who Know . . .", follows:

"Here, I am wearing a uniform. In Germany I could wear no uniform at all. I have been digging ditches, doing K.P. and many tasks with which I have been unfamiliar. But I am very glad to do it. When I took out my first papers to become a citizen of this country, I asked myself if there were any way in which I might show my appreciation to my new country. The Selective Service Act was passed and then came my chance. I volunteered for service in the Army. I feel that I must earn my citizenship. I know the situation in the countries of Europe and I can tell you, only those who know Germany, Russia and Italy can truly appreciate the freedom in America. By thus earning my right to be a citizen I hope to be able to tell others that they too, in order to breathe the freedom of this country, must be ready to share the responsibilities as well as the pleasures of their new land."

To Advance Jewish Education

In endorsing the observance of Jewish Education Month and Week, President Truman in a message to the American Association for Jewish Education declared that religious education renders a service not only to the children but to their "community, to their country and to the world."

The message was made public by Mark Eisner, president of the association. The Jewish Education Month culminates in the observance of Jewish Education Week from October 8 to 15.

Mr. Eisner said the observance was designed to stimulate Jewish parents to give their children a religious education and to stress the community's responsibility in providing adequate religious education facilities.

Calls Anti-Semitism Social Symptom

The first international conference of Christians and Jews, held recently in London resulted in an acknowledgment that anti-Semitism is a Christian problem. Dr. Henry N. MacCracken, retired president of Vassar College and chairman of the London conference, said in Chicago, Ill.

Dr. MacCracken addressed 200 persons at an Interfaith luncheon at the close of a three-day conference of the midwest region of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

"Anti-Semitism is a corroding influence that eats away at the spiritual fiber," Dr. MacCracken said. "No true Christian can be an anti-Semite. He said anti Semitism was "a symptom of a sick society, fostered by ignorance and prejudice."

Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, warned that democratic and republican governments must build a better society than Communists promise if they were to survive.

The most important Nazis in the little Bavarian town of Drechenreuth, received picks and shovels and instructions to dig up the bodies of Jews. Ninety-eight known Nazis were rounded up by military government officers. They unearthed thirty-six bodies of Jews who died while on a death march about seventeen months ago from the Buchenwald concentration camp to Flossenburg. The bodies were reinterred in a Jewish community cemetery.

During British raids in the Old City of Jerusalem, troops invaded ancient synagogues, including the Hurva Synagogue, and searched the Holy Arks.

ZELSMAN-ABRAMS

The marriage of Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Abrams, 124 Ava Road, to Marvin Zelsman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Zelsman, 226 Rosemary Road, took place on Sunday, September 8, at three o'clock, at Goel Tzedec Synagogue, Rabbi Judah Washer officiating, assisted by Cantor A. Bernstein. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white satin, fashioned with a square neckline, long sleeves, a fitted bodice, and full skirt. Her long veil was caught to a satin headdress, and she carried a white Bible adorned with white and mauve orchids. Mrs. Herbert Berg, sister of the bride, attended her as matron of honour, wearing a rose-coloured draped dress, with a mauve hat trimmed with rose-coloured plumes, and carried a cascade of Talisman roses. Edward Zelsman attended the groom as best man. The synagogue was decorated with baskets of pink and white gladioli. The bride's mother, Mrs. Abrams, received in an aquamarine-blue nylon gown and matching accessories, with a corsage of roses. VISAS TO BE GRANTED FOR STUDY AT HEBREW UNIVERSITY

When a quota of fifty visas for American ex-servicemen who elected to study at the Hebrew University in Palestine under the G.I. Bill of rights was granted last spring, applications were also made by students who had not served in the war. Such applications were rejected at the time, but the University Administration continued to urge the Palestine Government to reconsider its decision in the matter. It was pointed out that it had always been the purpose of the University to intensify the cultural ties between the Jewish National Home and the Diaspora, and that it was therefore essential that young people abroad, especially future rabbis, communal leaders, and educators, should be allowed an opportunity to study at the Hebrew University.

On July 16 the University was informed by the Palestine Government that it had now been decided to accept applications for the temporary admission of students from the United Kingdom, Canada, South Africa and the United States of America, providing that the students are nationals of those countries. These visas will be granted subject to certain conditions, and the exact procedure has not as yet been defined. The extension of this arrangement to other countries as well is under consideration.

Allan Bronfman, of Montreal, is national president of the Canadian Friends of The Hebrew University.

McDONALD DEMANDS D.P. SOLUTION

Jews in displaced persons camps in Europe may resort to violence as a result of their plight, James G. McDonald, an American member of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine, warned at Philadelphia, Pa. He demanded a quick solution of the displaced persons problem without "consideration of politics."

Mr. McDonald spoke at a conference of 300 delegates from seventy communities in New Jersey, Delaware and eastern Pennsylvania that will conduct fall campaigns for the $100,000,000 United Jewish Appeal.

ONTARIO'S growing gold . . . her largest cash crop . . . is tobacco. Its twenty-year development, from nothing [illegible] something, has been due almost entirely to the phenomenal [illegible] flue-cured tobacco—the most valuable of the three types grown here. The others are burley and dark-leaf. This year a [illegible] cigar leaf—one thousand acres of it—opens [illegible] possibilities. Tobacco is a delicate plant and a demanding one, needing utmost watchfulness and even handmade [illegible] during its complicated cure. Its cultivation means [illegible] short-season work with high rewards for all concerned.
